Electronic Resources Developed:

1) Psychology's Feminist Voices

http://www.feministvoices.com

A multimedia digital archive featuring over 240 original profiles of women in psychology's past and contemporary feminist psychologists. Based on an extensive oral history program begun in 2004, the site also features archival and contemporary photo galleries, interviews with full transcripts, an original documentary, teaching resources, and videos showcasing the perspectives and experiences of a wide range of psychologists who enact feminist values in their lives and work. The site is fully searchable, has attracted over 230,000 "unique" visitors since August, 2010, millions of hits, and has over 1300 Facebook followers. I developed the site and oversee all content. All material has been written and contributed by the Psychology's Feminist Voices team – see http://www.feministvoices.com/about

•Reviewed in Sex Roles DOI: 10.1007/s11199-014-0349-9

2) The Changing Face of Feminist Psychology: A Video Documentary and Teaching Tool (©Rutherford, 2007, 2009) http://www.feministvoices.com/video

This 40-minute documentary, written and produced by myself and a small team of students, presents historical and contemporary issues in feminist psychology. It chronicles the synergy between the second wave of the women's movement and the emergence of feminist psychology and features experts in the field talking about ongoing challenges and future directions. It has been requested by and disseminated widely to individual instructors and university libraries.

3) SPSSI Was There: An Interactive Timeline

http://www.spssitimeline.org/

This is an interactive timeline developed to convey the synergy between science and society through the history of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues. It features original text, photos, videos, and other archival material displaying the multiple ways social science has been deployed to address social and political concerns throughout the 20th and into the 21st century. I developed the site with a small team and wrote and uploaded all of the historical text and materials.
