<http://www.feministvoices.com>

A multimedia digital archive featuring over 250 original profiles of women in psychology's past and contemporary feminist psychologists. Based on an extensive oral history project initiated in 2004, the site also houses interviews with full transcripts and video clips, photo galleries, an original documentary, and teaching resources. The site has hosted over 600,000 "unique" visitors since August, 2010, has over 3400 Facebook followers and over 1500 Twitter followers. All video content is also on an associated YouTube channel with 425 subscribers and over 73,000 views. I developed the site and oversee all content. All materials have been written and contributed by members of the Psychology's Feminist Voices team – see <http://www.feministvoices.com/about>

•PFV's Twitter account was selected by Bustle magazine in 2015 as one of its "15 Feminist Twitter Accounts You Need to Follow Right Now," writing: "If you're interested in the academic side of feminism, whether it's as an academic yourself or as somebody with an interest in psychology, this Twitter about feminist women in psychology is going to give you conniptions. It's not all about history, either: it rages about academic wage gaps and inequality today, joins in theoretical debates about intersectional feminism, and generally wields its intelligence for serious good." – see <https://www.bustle.com/articles/119375-15-feminist-twitter-accounts-you-need-to-follow-right-now>

2) Gender Matters: Using Gender-Based Analysis in Psychology video series. A 7-video series produced with funding from the Association for Psychological Science to teach undergraduate psychology students the what, why, and how of gender-based analysis. Videos include: 1: What is Gender-Based Analysis; 2: Sex vs. Gender; 3: Rethinking Research Priorities and Outcomes; 4: Examining Concepts and Theories; 5: Formulating Research Questions; 6: Analyzing Factors Intersecting with Sex and Gender; 7: Language and Visual Representations. The video series is accompanied by a Teaching Guide and a selection of interviews with feminist psychologists talking about how feminism and gender influence the way they do research. Editing and production by Alexandra Fox.

3) "Feminist Psychologists Talk About..." video series. Three thematic videos produced by the Psychology's Feminist Voices team on intersectionality, research methods, and women's mental health and feminist therapy. Videos include discussion questions and resources to enhance their classroom use. They have been viewed over 13,000 times on YouTube and are also available at the project website:

4) "This is what a psychologist looks like" is a 4-minute video featuring prominent women of color talking about how and why they became psychologists and what inspires them about the field. Developed as part of the Museum Day Live! pop-up exhibit,

Inspiring histories, inspiring lives: Women of color in psychology. Editing and production by Alexandra Fox.

5) The Changing Face of Feminist Psychology: A Video Documentary and Teaching Tool (©Rutherford, 2007, 2009) <http://www.feministvoices.com/video>

This 40-minute documentary, written and produced by myself and a team of students, presents historical and contemporary issues in feminist psychology. It chronicles the synergy between the second wave of the women's movement and the emergence of feminist psychology and features experts in the field talking about ongoing challenges and future directions. It has been requested by and disseminated widely to individual instructors and university libraries. It has been viewed on YouTube over 4500 times.

6) SPSSI Was There: An Interactive Timeline

<http://www.spssitimeline.org/>

An interactive timeline developed to convey the synergy between science and society through the history of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues. It features original text, photos, videos, and other archival material displaying the multiple ways social science has been deployed to address social and political concerns throughout the 20th and into the 21st century. I developed the site with a small team and wrote and uploaded all of the historical text and materials.

7) I Am Psyched! Inspiring Histories, Inspiring Lives: Women of Color in Psychology

A multimedia pop-up exhibit developed in collaboration with the Women's Programs Office of the American Psychological Association and the Cummings Center for the History of Psychology for a special edition of the Smithsonian's Museum Day Live! on March 12, 2016 (see <http://gradpsych.apags.org/pi/women/iampsyched/museum-day/index.aspx>). Through panels, videos, and interactives, it explores the history and contemporary contributions of women of color in psychology. It is designed to engage girls of color and excite them about careers in the social and behavioral sciences. I am on the 3-member project development team that conceptualized the exhibit, procured grants, sourced and wrote content, and oversaw production, implementation, and launch. We are now developing digital content and curriculum materials for high school and college use. The exhibit is traveling across the United States in 2017-18 in conjunction with events at colleges and universities (for information about the National Tour, see <http://gradpsych.apags.org/pi/women/iampsyched/default.aspx>).
